Excerpt: . . . shook his hand and called him comrade, telling him that he was glad to meet him. The rounds of the hospital were not made, as time did not permit the president to stay much longer. In all he was there about ten minutes. Before leaving he shook hands with each sister and referred to a coincidence in regard to the name of the hospital. . The only hospital in which he had ever been a patient in his life, the president said, was also conducted by sisters, and was called Providence hospital. That was in Indianapolis. As the president entered his carriage the crowd surged closer, but there was no cheering, only an appearance of suppressed enthusiasm. Way was made, the horses whipped up. and the party proceeded to the Washington. Michael A. Meyendorff has been intimately acquainted with the president ever since the days...
