Then her gentle hands slipped off what remained of wet and torn clothing, they washed the mud from her guest's face and rubbed her cold feet; wine was produced from the cupboard, broth was put down to warm, and then Lodoiska approached with a spoon and offered to feed her. Thou must not move either arm yet, -- and Sophie, rejoicing in the sense of rest and security, lay back and submitted to the ministrations of the graceful figure bending over her. The fair Lodolska was a woman a little over thirty, slight, thin, and dark, with a pretty face somewhat marred by traces of smallpox, --far, therefore, from being the divine beauty that her enraptured lover has portrayed her, -- but her expression was bright and winning, her voice soft and sweet, and her manner soothing and reassuring. Sophie recalled...
